Risk of Modern Slavery Practices

CCET is committed to mitigating the risk of modern slavery occurring within our business or our supply chain. The types of exploitation in Modern Slavery can be defined more as the following:

- Trafficking
- Forced labour.
- Forced marriage.
- Slavery
- Dishonest and deceptive work, services and labour
- Debt slavery
- Servitude
- child labour

Supply chains

To support services being delivered to the clients of C&C Empathy Training Ltd, the following supply chains categories are used by us:

- IT – any software or hardware, including those needed to host training sessions and E-learning
- Accountancy and business support services
- Telecommunications
- Public liability insurance
- Professional services

Many of our supply chains are UK based with some local to the business, and some based in USA, but with UK offices.

Assessment and risk and actions

Assessing the overall risk of modern slavery across the business is an ongoing part of risk assessment and during the previous financial year the risk is low for modern slavery and that our greatest risk of involvement in modern slavery comes indirectly from supply chain. Monitoring this and being aware of potential modern slavery, CCET aims to supply a business where the supply chain used supports mitigating risks of modern slavery.

The main point of potential modern slavery within supply chains will be within

- IT software and hardware

Part of the actions to assess and address modern slavery for CCET on an ongoing basis and with additions, are:

- running checks of modern slavery policies with those already part of the supply chain and any new ones.
- raising and providing awareness of modern slavery within the organisation
- recognise and be aware of inappropriate practice, such as unusually low prices
- build meaningful relationship with supply chain
- understand and act on the responsibility of CCET to affect change
- continue to develop a risk management approach by identifying areas where modern slavery could be present.
- along with existing compliance training, CCET are committed to ongoing training for Director Carolyn Cleveland and any employed staff.

We are not aware of any incidents of modern slavery having occurred during the financial year across our business, or with the supply chains used to carry out the business.
